Excerpt: .95th Article of the School Law, encouraging the same In every school there is more or less demand for books of reference and general instruction, over, above, and beyond those used in the school, which are mere text books to prepare the pupils to crave and appreciate the former. If, after using the text book awhile, this craving be not satisfied, the children fail to see the importance of laying up principle upon principle, and soon become discouraged in their attendance upon school. On the other hand, once let them have access to just such books, and they will soon find, that in the act of devouring their contents, they will need more of the gastric juice of principle to digest them, and feeling this need, with no other incentive than the desire of digestion, they will immediately apply themselves to their text books, and thus make the acquisition of principle as a means to an end, pleasant and inspiring. Under such self-imposed stimulus, how soon would the standard of the school rank high? Then let trustees, teachers, and parents see to it, and establish just such a library in each and every school district. During the year I have made 296 school visits and addresses. With the exception of 12, I have visited every school twice; and these 12, in consequence of being closed at the time of my call, but once. Some I have visited three, four, and even five times. Generally, the teachers...
