Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Territorial Problems of the Baltic Basin, Vol. 18 In these days we often think of seas, rivers, and other waterways as natural boundaries separating nations and peoples, and affording a certain security against attack and invasion. But in earlier centuries, in the age before strategic railways, this was not the prevailing belief. Three generations ago the seas were not regarded as barriers: they were connecting influences that served to bind states and regions together. The sea has always been important as the great highway of commerce, and it has also facilitated the exchange of beliefs and ideas. In the past, nations have therefore been peculiarly interested in the seas that washed their shores, and also in the other shores that were touched by the same waters. In spite of changed conditions of travel and transport, the interest in waterways has persisted. Italy seems anxious to control both shores of the Adriatic; and England feels that she must control the entire circuit of the Irish Sea. No nation at present can hope to make the Baltic Sea its own; but such ambitions have been cherished in the past and at times almost realized. Four hundred years ago Denmark was the greatest power on the Eastern Sea. In the seventeenth century Sweden developed an even more complete hegemony in those waters, but was forced to surrender it to the Russians early in the eighteenth century. In recent years Germany has dominated the Baltic, and for a year after the Russian collapse the shores and the shipping of the entire sea was at her mercy. It should be noted that Sweden has all her sea coast on these...
